Vol. 3 No. 31

January 1970

St. Margaret's and All Saints Church in the village of Wyton in Huntingdonshire is the centre-piece of this charming winter scene. Although mentioned in the Domesday Book, very little, if anything, remains of this early period. Some of the south west chancel and south wall are probably 12th century and the nave arcade and north aisle were built about 1200-1210.

When the snow finally disappears another whiteness springs to life, for then the old gravestones seem to be half buried in a carpet of nodding snowdrops.

To one side of the grounds, behind slender, wrought-iron gates, are buried war-time servicemen from the nearby Royal Air Force station.

The old village of Wood Walton in Huntingdonshire was once some distance from the present village, resting on a hill, but cut off when a new road was built. The old church remains but the new village has gradually grown up lower down the hill. Wood Walton Fen some two miles away is a National Nature Reserve, where among other important experiments, an attempt has been made to re-introduce the large copper butterfly, extinct in Britain since the 1800's.

King's College Chapel seen from any angle is a structure of rare beauty, as well as a source of immense interest to the student of history. Begun in 1446 by Henry IV and added to spasmodically throughout the reigns of Edward IV, Richard III and Henry VII, it was finally completed in 1515 by Henry VIII. It is this slow growth which has evoked the interest, as visitors to Cambridge seek to identify the various styles of architecture with a particular period.

This attractive 'summer-house' is the Memorial Shelter at Balsham, one of Cambridgeshire's many delightful villages.
It stands on the village green in front of the Primary School and together with a beautiful stained glass window was given to the village by the Prince family.

Only a few hundred yards from shops and traffic, Peterborough Park belies its location in this serene glimpse of Autumn. It comprises 22 acres opposite All Saints' Church, between Park Road and Broadway, and was acquired by the Corporation in 1908 on 999 years' lease.
During the Summer months, lawn tennis and bowls enthusiasts have all the necessary facilities and there are band concerts for music-lovers.
